

All dressed up

and someplace special to go

BY CYNTHIA MCMULLEN
TIMES-DISPATCH STAFF WRITER

The weekend's theme may be "One Virginia, One Future," but the reality is that there are two inaugural balls.

Not that there's anything wrong with that.

More than 4,000 people will crowd the Richmond Center tomorrow night when the Virginia Inaugural Ball throws open its doors. An additional thousand will pack the Siegel Center for the Young & Young at Heart Ball, a less expensive, more youth-oriented alternative that's making its debut with this inauguration.

But forget all that. What's Cinderella — or more importantly, what are the real people — wearing to the balls that will celebrate Mark R. Warner's swearing-in as Virginia's 69th governor?

Survey says: Black is back (as if it had ever gone anywhere).

As far as anybody knows, they didn't call one another and ask, but every one of tomorrow's femme fab four — Lisa Collis, Anne Holton, Daphne Reid and Barbara Ukrop — will wear black to the balls, as will their respective spouses,

SEE BALLS, PAGE C5 ▶

In honor of
The Governor of the Commonwealth of Virginia
Mark Robert Warner
and
Ms. Lisa Collis
The Virginia Inaugural Committee
requests the pleasure of your company

Actress and designer Daphne Maxwell Reid of New Millennium Studios made her own inaugural ball gown.